Welcome to My Travels, a podcast about the adventures of Tim, a geek who loves to travel. In this episode, we will visit the Rocky Mountains in Colorado.

In late October of 2005, we were off to Denver. After spending a few hours hiking around Red Rock, where the leaves were still bright yellow, we drove up to Estes Park. I shot this picture of a fast-running stream against the beautiful backdrop of snow-topped mountains. I didn't realize that people actually live in the park until I saw their mailboxes near some mountain cabins.

We hiked up to Nymph Lake where the weather went from sunny to snowing and back to sunshine again in just a couple of hours. The fresh smell of pine in the cool air was invigorating.
